

Alex Alvarez

Alex Alvarez is a second year MD/PhD student at the University of Arizona College of Medicine - Tucson. Although he was born and raised in Albuquerque, New Mexico, Alex now calls Tucson home, having completed his undergraduate in Biomedical Engineering at the University of Arizona and staying in the city for medical school. After he finishes pre-clinical coursework in June, he will begin his PhD studies in Biomedical Engineering, developing novel ultrasound techniques for clinical applications. In addition to pursuing a career as a primary care pediatrician and as an engineer developing new ultrasound techniques relevant to primary care, Alex plans to continue to engage in community organizing and advocacy efforts, especially related to criminal justice reform. In his free time, he likes to ride his bike in the beautiful Tucson mountains and make films with his partner.
